Puture of the Sport in That State Rather Dubious.

ST. ASAPH AND VIRGINIA JOCKEY CLUB.

Break Away from the Restriction Imposed by Self-Constituted Powers.

Racing affairs are in a most unsettled condition just at present. The success of the amendment to the Constitution of the State of New York, prohibiting the enactment of laws legalizing betting on races, opens up a big field of speculation as to what the status of the sport of the turf in that State will be next season, whether it will be abandoned entirely, whether an attempt will be made to conduct racing without the betting-ring adjunct, restricting speculation to such wagers as are made on the ned between men of wellknown means and whose word is as good as their money, or whether the gentlem of wealth and influence who have taken it upon themselves to guide the destinies of the running turf in America will devise some more satisfactory way out of

Before the passage of the Ives bill as Before the passage of the Ives bill an effort was made to conduct racing without betting, and the failure of the attempt is still fresh in the mind of every turfman. It is not at all probable that the experiment will be repeated in New York. So far as the nod-system of betting is concerned, it would apparently be a difficult matter to make it sufficiently profitable to the racing associations to a difficult matter to make it sufficiently profitable to the racing associations to justify the hanging up of the prizes to be contested for. Certainly if the associations accepted money from the book-gakers for the privilege of entering the purpose of accepting grounds for the purpose of accepting wagers made in this way there would be no difficulty in constraing the practice as a flagrant violation of the law.

WEST AND SOUTH. Say what they will, horsemen are com-pelled to admit that the success of the amendment resulted in a blow to the sport in New York from which it will take a long time to recover. No matter sport in New York from which it will take a long time to recover. No matter how hard those interested may work, the chances are very much against the possibility of any arrangement being completed under which racing can be successfully conducted in New York next season, Under these circumstances, the sport will flourish in the West and in the South as it never has before, and Chicago, no loubt, will supplant New York as the great racing centre of the continent. And what will become of that august and supreme authority, the Jockey Club. To all appearances it was ready to throw up the sponge before the amendment was adopted. Its rules were openly violated every day, with the opening of the St. Asaph track, and now the fact that such an organization ever existed seems to be almost forgotten. It appears, however, that the club still meets occasionally, and that the club still meets occasionally, and that the club still meets occasionally, and that it also issues a periodical edict which nobody pays any attention to.

One of Manager Schmelz's players, little Deane, was the first to tumble to the fact that the Baltimore players were an important of the Jockey Club for permission to race during the month of December, notwithstanding that such a proceeding would be in direct violation of one of its fundamental regulations. The Jockey Club, it is understood, replied that to grant such permission would be a violation of its agreement with the Weater Turf Congress. Is it possible that the Jockey Club will remain in existence for the sole purpose of continuing its efforts to control racing affairs in the West? Last season the Jockey Club condescended to allow the turf congress to have a small voice in matters affecting the West more directly, and it is to be hoped that this season the Jockey Club a similar courtesy.

Secretary McIntyre has appealed from the decision of the Jockey Club a similar courtesy.

THE INDICATIONS.

Secretary McIntyre has appealed from the decision of the Jockey Club, both as to racing in December and regarding the resistion of the nurice of horses under the possible was to racing in December and regarding the resistion of the nurice of horses under the possible of the screeners. The Jockey Club a similar courtesy.

HANOVER HAPPENINGS EXTEND THE COURTESY.

to racing in December and regarding the rejection of the entries of horses under the name of W. Woods. It was expected that these matters would be acted upon at the meeting of the Jockey Club on Saturday, but they were not. It may not be true that the Virginia Jockey Cub intends to race throughout December, and to accept W. Woods's or any other entries, Jockey Club or no Jockey Club; but all indications point in that direction. Cossack is among the entries given out by the club in the last race to-day, and all this horse's races have been run on the Alexander Island track. Three of the horses which started in the gentleman's race on Saturday had started at the Island track also, and they appeared on the St. Asaph programme without even the for-mality of a change in the names of their owners. It was reported on Saturday that a foreign book would be reopened at St. Asaph this week, This is denied by Secretary McIntyre. A number of horses arrived yesterday from Narragansett, and it was with difficulty that they were provided with stable accommodations at St. Asaph. The arrivals included Dick Loud, with 8: R. Bradley, R. Smith, 6; T. Barrett, 4; Watson, 6; Newton, 4. The arrival of fresh horses will be halled with delight by the club officials, as well as by its patrons. The fields have been small throughout the meeting, and it is difficult to credit the statement that 400 horses have been stabled at the track from the start. Certainly their names have not appeared on the programme.

THIRD PLACE.

Beginning to-day the rule of the Old Dominion Jockey Club that horses must be ridden out for third place is to be more vigorously enforced. This is certainly a move which will have the approval of every patron of the track, if not of the horsemen. At present this is not done, except in rare instances. Horses whose owners think they have no chance to win are not persevered with. They carry no stable money and are therefore not ridden out for the small amounts which go to the second and third horses. The result is that fancy odds prevail against their chances to finish in the first three, and the public simply burns up its money on them. One, two, three betting onder these circumstances means ruination to backers, and a harvest to the bookmakers. In enforcing this rule, the jockeys who make no effort in the homestretch are not the only ones which should be looked after. Most of the horses whose owners are not content to run second or third drep out of the contest before the THIRD PLACE. be looked after. Most of the horses whose owners are not content to run second or third drop out of the contest before the half-mile pole is reached. If the rule in question is rigidly enforced it will make better racing, closer finishes, and result in a great deal more satisfaction among the betting public.

WEEDING OUT.

WEEDING OUT.

Judge Oyster is doing some good work in weeding out some of the alleged jockeys who have made their appearance at the Island lately. Cook, Downing, and R. King will not be seen in the saddle again, not for some time, at least, whereat the public will rejoice. These boys seemed to make a business of accepting mounts on which a slovenly ride was desired. Another lad who seems to belong to the same category is McKenzie. While he has shown his ability to sit in the saddle and make a show of finishing, he has also displayed other qualifications which make it necessary to keep an eye on him.

Backers are slowly setting a McKenzie.

Backers are slowly getting a line on the horses running at the Island, and during the last week the percentage of winning favorites increased perceptibly. A practice very much in vogue among owners is to run their horses out of their distance, perhaps in order to secure a better price when they are in right. For instance, Benfamin was started at six better price when they are in right. For instance, Benjamin was started at six and a quarter furiongs on Saturday, and it is enly on rare occasions that he can be induced to stay five. El Telegrapho, Jack Lovell, Jack Wilson, O'Hearn, Judge Post, St. Mark, and several others, are more or less wind-broken, and it is very risky business backing them at more than five furlongs at the outside.

NED HANLON'S ELEVEN.

A Reminiscence of the Association Fost-

Ball League. (Washington Post.) Voluble Ted Sullivan has been talking again, and this time he explains the scheme by which Manager Ned Hanion worked through his English experts at the association foot-ball game, who came to America long enough to show the other teams in the league what the game really is.

After the association foot-ball league was organized, all the team owners except Hanlon hustled hard to sign players who were considered the pick of the professions. Hanlon was so busy winning the National League base-ball pennant that he would not take time to hunt up a team to play foot-ball. When the time to play the opening games was at hand, all the other teams were ready but Hanlon's, and he was in a diemma. He argued that it would never do to have a team of weaklings for Haltimore audiences, after having won the base-ball pennant, and as the other five teams had gathered up all the really good talent, there appeared nothing left for him but to plod along with a team of rank tallenders. One day Ted Sullivan happened in Baltimore, and Hanlon chanced to meet him in front of the Eutaw House. In a casual way the subject of foot-ball came up, and Hanlon was deploring the fact that he had neglected to engage a team until it was too late.

"Well, Ned," said Sullivan, "if you are to play foot-ball, and those other people think they have the beat of you, why not go to England, and get the real article?"

TED GOES TO ENGLAND.

Hanlon, who is progressive in every-thing he does, jumped at the idea, and arrangements were made with Sulli-van by which he took the next steamer for England in quest of the kind of team that would open the eyes of the other managers. Meanwhile Mr. Hanlon joilled the Baltimore papers with stories about the great team he had gathered in De-troit, in which city they were said to be even then practicing to get in condi-

lon. How would Sullivan succeed in get-ting the players cut of England without the fact reaching this side of the water? Association foot-ball in England is simi-lar to base-ball in the United States, and PROVED AN ALIBI. Quite an interest has lately been excited in hunting circles over a warrant gotten out by one white man against another for the alleged shooting of turkeys before the season opened. The case was tried at Offley on Saturday before Justice E. T. Pollard, and the accused was acquitted, proving an alibi. It is believed, however, that the agitation of the matter will have a beneficial effect, as some of our citizens are determined to punish all violators, if possible, in the future.

The colored commissioners of Virginia for the Atlanta Exposition have issued an address to the colored people of that State urging them to begin preparations for a creditable display in the coming exposition. The commissioners say it is evident the colored people of Virginia have made sufficient material progress to evident the colored people of Virginia have made sufficient material progress to warrant them in putting that progress on exhibition. This action of the Virginia commissioners is commendable, and it will doubtless result in an exhibit which will be highly credit-able to the colored people of the Old Galitzin School Case. PITTSBURG, PA., November 12.—The Supreme Court this morning rendered an opinion in the Galitzin school-case, af-firming the decision of the lower court. The court refuses to restrain by injunc-tion the members of the order of St. Joseph (Catholic Sisters) from teaching in public schools in the garb of the order, or school directors from employing or per-mitting them to act in that capacity.

TALES OF THE TURF. THE OLD-TIME TYPE OF RACING-MAN

HAS DISAPPEARED. Strict Disciplinarians of the McDaniel School Have Passed Away-The Tem-, per of the Thoroughbred.

"We have no turfmen of the old school with us any longer," remarked a member of the Jockey Club a few evenings ago, in Delmonico's cafe. "I mean men of the stamp of Colonel McDaniel, who were peculiar to their own day. His was a character which would play a prominent part, in history or fiction where racing is concerned.

With never a through of the morrow he was content to let the day bring forth what it would. No man in his employ dared to question the why or wherefore of his commands, and he was feared and invariably meant punishment, and in this respect Colonel McDaniel had the ingenuity of a fiend. Harry Bassett, the best race-horse that the old turiman owned, was a victous brute, that hate the sight of a colored man, and would both bite and kick whenever the opportunity offered itself. The favorite mode of punishing any of his colored men was to place them astride the bar of the box-stall in which the savage horse was housed. Another negro, with a revolver Association (Sot-ball in Ediginal is saidled at to base-ball in the United States, and the departure of such an aggregation of talent would very likely be cabled over. Ted told Hanlon that he need not worry—that if he was not foxy enough to get the players out of England without the fact becoming known on this side, he would not accept one cent of remuneration for the trip.

When Sullivan landed in England he hurried to Liverpool and Manchester and saw three or four games played. He picked out seven players on the several teams and quietly approached them with offers to go to America. They fell in with the scheme right away, and the salaries offered them per month were more than they could get in a year in England. Pledging them to secrecy. Ted then went ries offered them per month were more than they could get in a year in England. Pledging them to secrecy. Ted then went to the directors of the clubs from which he had selected players to secure their releases. Fortunately for him there were no games scheduled for the next few days, and Ted, representing himself as being from Glasgow, asked the loan of the players to take to that city during their vacation time. When the players, who were in with the scheme, added their pleadings to this request, the directors agreed to let him have their star players and expenses during the time they were absent.

SMUGGLED GVER.

That same afternoon Ted got his prizes down to Laverbool, and the next morning they were headed by steamer for America. They all took passage as tradesmen, and were not signed as members of the Eadtmore team until they landed in New York. The next afternoon they showed their agility at Union Park, in Baltimore, far Hanlon, and he was so well pleased that he gave Sullivan a check big enough to make the money-loving Irishman's eyes sparkle. Filling in with a few plek-ups from here and there, Hanlon brought his eleven to Washington the next day for their first game in America. They made a holy show of Manager Schmelz's team. One of Manager Schmelz's players, little Dean. Was "A favorite form of amusement with the boys in McDaniel's stable was to crack corn-cobs. There was always a champion corn-cob that could break any of the others, the game being played by cracking them across each other. Rivalry ran so high at one time that rage. Calling every boy in line, he had them roll up their sleeves to the elbow and then, taking their cobs from them broke them across their arms, grinning temper displayed by celebrated race-horses, and a follower of the turf for many years voiced the opinion that many of the best performers had bad disposi-tions, and advanced the argument that a horse had to have a dash of the devil in his composition in order to be first class. There were warm arguments or both sides of the question. Some maintained that treatment had a great deal to do with the moulding of the character of every thoroughbred, and that few were naturally vicious.

HARRY BASSETT. "Take the case of Harry Bassett as an example," said the first speaker. "I happen to know all about him. There is no doubt he had a bad temper as a colt, and it has not improved very much by the tantalizing he got while instilling fear into the heart of McDaniel's boys. But you would think that he would become attached to Rowe, who rode him, and was very fond of the horse, and was always carrying dainties to him. One day the jockey was feeding him some sugar the jockey was feeding him some sugar out of his hand. When only a few crumbs remained Rowe dashed them into crumbs remained Rowe dashed them into the straw, and stooped to unroll a bandage on the horse's front leg. He knew nothing more until the doctor had finished putting fourteen stitches in his forehead, and if you will look at the starter's forehead any time you will see plainly where the sharp shoe tore away the scalp, cutting the skin in a semi-cir-cle for several inches. The brute had jumped on him, and would have killed him had help not been at hand. On an-other occasion, while working around his other occasion, while working around his hind legs, Howe was kicked back of the ear by Harry Bassett, and holsted through the door of the stall. It took several stitches to close that up also, and through the door of the stail. It took several stitches to close that up also, and the scar is discernible.

"But, on the other hand, whoever saw a sweeter-tempered horse than Kingston, and the years of hard campaigning he endured were enough to sour the disposition of any horse. He passed through it all, however, and took his medicine like the philosopher he must be, if horses can be said to know anything of philosophy. For many years an Irish terrier shared Kingston's box with him, and the friendship between them was touching. Exile was a devil, and Onondaga was such a fury that his eyes had to be put out.

"Panique was also a demon. When the Dwyers had him it took several men to handle him, and the process of saddling and bridling him was quite a complicated one. He always were a halter, and when and bridling him was quite a complicated one. He always wore a haiter, and when he was to be worked or raced he would be driven into a corner and kept there until a stout pole could be snapped into the ring of the haiter. Two men would then seize the pole and hold his head so that he could not bite those who approached him. Four men would then enter the stall and put on the saddle and bridle, Panique kicking and striking all the while and snorting defiance at his captors. McLaughlin would be put up on the horse in the stall, and when the door was thrown open the son of Alarm would bound out of the box like a lion. He frequently tried to savage McLaughlin, attempting to seize his leg and pull him from the saddle." Many battles between men and horses were then recounted, and then those who favored the use of kindness rather than favored the use of kindness rather than severe measures in the care and training of race-horses had another inning. The bulk of the blame for bad-tempered horses was inid at the door of vicious, drunken grooms, who were cruel to their charges. The thoroughbred represents the highest type of perfection in the horse, they said, and on being treated unjustly he does what any well-bred man would do under the circumstances—fights back and tries to give blow for blow. Instances were cited where vicious horses had been and tries to give blow for blow. Instances were cited where vicious horses had been rendered comparatively docile by kind treatment. Jockeys who are only too fond of spurring and whipping their mounts unnecessarily came in for a scoring before the meeting broke up, and the Jockey Club's method of dealing with riders who display temper and punish horses brutally was commended.
